Text : MOVE OVER, YOU ADULTS !

Two years ago, Craig Kielburger, a Canadian boy then only 12 years old, founded Free the Children, a youth organization aimed at ending child labour and encouraging youth involvement in community service. Since then, hundreds of local chapters have formed all over the world.

Now 14, Kielburger has travelled extensively, meeting with children and giving speeches on child exploitation. He recently spoke with Newsweek's Susan H. Greenberg.

Greenberg : Where did the idea for Free the Children originate ?

Kielburger : I was looking for the comics in the local newspaper and came across an article about Iqbal Masih, a young Pakistani, whose photo was on the front page with the headline BOY OF 12 SPOKE OUT, MURDERED.
It caught my attention because I was also 12 then. I read about how, at 4, he was sold into slavery and became a carpet weaver. And how, at 10, he was able to escape and began to speak out for working children in Pakistan and around the world. And how, at 12, he was murdered.

Greenberg : Why did you identify so strongly with him ?

Kielburger : I had learned about how slavery had been abolished. And that confused me : if slavery was abolished, how can it be alive today ? So I began research and learned that an estimated 250 million children around the world were involved in working. I went to my class at school and said, « Listen, here's an issue. This is what I know about it. This is what I want to do. Who wants to help ? » And Free the Children was born.

Computers in the third world

Computers are on their way to invading the Third World. Although the poor countries are considered technologically lagging tens of years behind compared to advanced countries, they cannot avoid looking at computers.
These brain-machines are, as we know, very profitable to the users : their rapidity and their technical capacity have made them an important partner for finance executives*, factories, transport, chemistry and medical care in very technologically - advanced countries which are able to pay for them.
Rapid world economic and technical development do not allow any country in the world to overlook computers. Business people who need rapid results or want to know the present state of their book-keeping find them very necessary. Many small or medium-sized companies begin using them, too.
Although their prices are going down, high-performing computers are still beyond the purse of many who should use them in their work.
Anyway, these machines have now proved of great necessity for our modern and technical age.
Many important fields and executives find them indispensable for the correct and rapid fulfilment of their task. Banks are frequently the first to use them for the satisfaction of their clientele. Competitivity in business is now partly based on the use of computers in factories.

TEXT

Over a million teenagers run away from home each year. Some are running from intolerable situations such as physical or sexual abuse. But more often, running away is sparked by arguments with parents over such matters as curfews, school grades, household chores and choice of friends. Perhaps your parents'outlook and thinking on matters simply does not coincide with yours… Is that any reason to rebel or run away ? Besides, running away resolves nothing, it only creates more problems. A few runaways actually get jobs. But for most of them, life is worse than it was before they left home… Teens don't find freedom on the streets. Instead, they find other runaways or throwaways like themselves living anywhere where they have no protection from rapists or muggers. They also find a lot of people who make it their dirty business to exploit young people, and teenage runaways are an easy target… Little wonder that many of them end up seriously injured or dead. It thus makes sense to put forth every effort to talk with your parents. Let them know how you feel and what is going on. Whatever the case, talk, don't run away. Even if life at home is not ideal, keep in mind that things can be even worse when you are on the run.

TEXT : DEVELOPMENT IN THE THIRD WORLD

For far too many generations, uncounted millions of children have grown and many have died in subhuman poverty, hunger and malnutrition. This was almost accepted as a fact of life, a permanent state of affairs.

Many governments are now engaged in a variety of activities to provide community based services. For example : efforts towards comprehensive programmes for rural developments including food crops and water supply ; improving the position of women ; developing population policies ; attention to the environment and programmes in the field of human settlements. One important component of this new approach is Primary Health Care which, however, is not something new or untried. It is an approach based on the realities of the problems confronting us all and on experiences in many countries.

As far back as the 1960's, governments in various parts of the world, with the cooperation of UNICEF and W.H.O began retraining traditional midwives and other villagers as part-time health workers. Likewise, several years ago, UNICEF began developing, in conjunction with a number of countries, kits containing the simple medecines required to treat the most common elements of each country. TEXT :

In the Third World, children have always suffered from exploitation. This is especially true of Malagasy rural children. This sort of exploitation is often disguised. Children seem not to realize it though it does have some bad side effects, especially in the educational field.

At a very early age, as soon as she is strong enough to help her parents , a rural girl has to take part in the daily family tasks. The older she gets, the more responsibility she must assume. She has to take care of the baby. Besides, she cannot avoid the family chores such as pestling rice, feeding poultry, drawing water from the river, most of the time with baby humped on her back. As for the boy, his tasks consist in collecting, preparing fire-wood, tending the cattle, scaring birds off the family rice-fields. In such conditions, little time is given to children to learn their lessons and do their homeworks.

Moreover, most rural children are poorly nourished. Maize, cassava, sweet potatoes along with vegetables compose their diet. Meat and sometimes rice are quite a luxury for them. Sustained attention and effort at school are unlikely to be expected of such pupils. No wonder that there are so many school drop-outs. Worst of all, some parents pay little or no attention to education. They are rather reluctant to send their children to school because, for example, raising beef cattle would be more beneficial than being educated.

TEXT : STARVING NATION.

Ruvaria, a small, overpopulated, and unfriendly nation, was faced with the great problem of finding more food for its starving people. In fact, living and health conditions became so bad that many people were dying. Others were suffering so much that they wanted to die. Most of the deaths involved babies, young children and the elderly.

A group of Americans became very concerned about Ruvaria's problems. They asked the President of the United States to help the Ruvarians and give them the needed food. However, the President realised that if he gave Ruvaria the food, it would serve to keep the population excessively high and might even cause a population boom. Then, when the food is gone, the people of Ruvaria will be again faced with the same problems.

On the other hand, if the President didn't supply the food, many people would die. But in the long run, this would greatly reduce Ruvaria's population. With a much smaller population Ruvaria would be able to support itself and allow its people to live fuller, more comfortable and healthier lives.

TEXT : 18,000 Homeless : Flooding in Madagascar's Capital

"An alarm sounded in our neighborhood. It was raining. I saw neighbors running around and pitching in to help each other get rid of the rain water, but the water level kept rising. I woke my three children because we had to leave our house. Since then this tent is our home."

Martine Rasoamihevitra is one of the 18,000 residents of Antananarivo, Madagascar who have been rendered homeless by the incessant floods that have hit the capital since mid-January. Fortunately for her, UNICEF has provided tents for 15,000 people including non-perishable food items, water purification substances, containers, blankets, mosquito nets and even school kits to 1,200 students from elementary schools that lost their school supplies in the floods.

Aid by the local authorities has stopped, now that the water level has gone down. But many families stay in their tents. Their houses aren't under water any more, but they are full of stinking mud. Some houses have been destroyed completely. After last weeks' cyclone, more than 30,000 people in Madagascar have been affected by the bad weather. Some people lost their houses, others were forced to move.

"We moved here a few years ago", one woman, who lives in one of the Unicef tents in Antanjombato says. "We are originally from Ambohimangakely, but there is no more land for us there". The women, who live with their families in a little village of wooden huts next to a canal, earn a living carrying bricks, while the men pull pousse-pousse.

For some families, the rainy season is an annual disaster, not just the one that happened this year. "This is the third time that we live in tents on this dike", one woman says. "The rice fields here are the land of our ancestors so we can't leave. It used to be OK here, until they build these dikes around Tana. Now we are flooded every rainy season during three years." The woman, who has a job in a factory, now sleeps with family, a calf and a pet cat in the same tent. Her husband goes out fishing. "Some of the neighbors lost all their rice", she says. "But we didn't, we were lucky. We harvested before the floods started".

By Unicef, with additional reporting by Mada English journal.

TEXT RAPID POPULATION GROWTH

Another feature of Africa's population is its rapid growth. Africa is the fastest growing region in the world. Africa will double its population in less than 35 years at its current growth rate. In Kenya, the country with the most rapid population growth, an average woman has eight children. At Kenya's rate of growth (4.2 percent), its population will double in 17 years.

Rapid population growth makes progress difficult. Many African nations cannot meet the needs of their people for medical care, safe drinking water, and good housing.

Population experts give several reasons for Africa's rapid population growth. Medical research and vaccination programs have brought down the death rate. The infant mortality rate in many African countries is still high, but children who survive their early years are living longer. Second, in rural areas, most Africans are farmers. They need many children to help with the farm work and then to care for their aged parents.

Rural families are not likely to give up having many children anytime soon. Parents see children as a blessing. Many African proverbs stress the importance of each child. The Ibo people of Nigeria ask "Gini ka nnwa" –"What counts for more than a child?" A West African proverb comments on how children contribute to family life as workers : "Each extra mouth comes attached to two extra hands".

TEXT : # TELEVISION

Television now plays such an important part in so many people's life that it is essential for us to decide whether it is a blessing or a curse. Obviously, TV has both advantages and disadvantages, but does the former outweigh the latter?

In the first place, TV is not only a convenient source of entertainment, but also a comparatively cheap one. The TV viewers do not have to pay for expensive seats at the theatre, all they have to do is to press a knob, and they can see plays, films and shows of every kind, not to mention political discussions and the latest exciting football match. There is no transport to arrange, too. Some people maintain that this is precisely where the danger lies.

The TV viewer needs to do nothing; he/she doesn't even use his/her legs. He/she takes no initiative. He/she makes no choice and exercises, no judgement. He/she is completely passive and has everything presented to him/her without any effort on his /her part. TV, it is often said, keeps one informed about the current events, allows one to follow the latest developments in science and politics, and offers an endless series of programmes which are both instructive and stimulating. It could be argued that the radio performs this service just as well, but on TV, everything is much more real, much more living.

One of my friends told me the other day his TV-set had broken down and that he and his family had suddenly found they had far more time to do things.

TEXT : MARRIAGE AND FAMILY

The family is the cornerstone of traditional African society. Marriage is much more than a union between two people. It builds and strengthens ties between families.

The visiting and celebrating during Wambui and Jomo's wedding will continue for eight days. On the eighth day, Wambui officially becomes a member of her husband's family. Jomo's family celebrates the addition of Wambui to their family group and the linking of the two families.

In some African societies a marriage like the one between Wambui and Jomo would be an arranged marriage. In this type of marriage, parents decide whom their children will marry. Even in places where most marriages are arranged, some people will make their own choice of marriage partners.

In traditional African societies, marriages may include the giving of money, goods, cattle or services by the husband to his new wife's family. This gift, called bridewealth, is usually given before the marriage to show that the groom is serious about marrying the bride and that he has the resources to support her. The payment also acknowledges that the bride's family is losing a valuable worker that the husband's family is gaining.

TEXT: Water and Soil

All living beings must eat and drink. For this reason, two things have always had to be studied very carefully everywhere in the world where people live. One of these things is water. The other is the soil where food is grown in.

Plants must drink, too, and systems of irrigation have existed right from the early times in our history. In modern times, in places like the valley of the Nile of the River Volta, irrigation systems are being constructed now to make the work of the farmers much more efficient and much less likely to be spoilt by drought than it used to be. All over the world water is being used more efficiently than ever.

Nowadays, farmers are helped in their work by experts. All these experts have been trained in agricultural colleges or at special centres. Some of them study the problems of erosion. In some parts of Africa, the heavy rain which falls in the rainy seasons carries the good soil away from the fields where it is not needed and only leaves stones and poor soil on which can grow very few crops. When the soil is carried away from the fields, we say that erosion is happening in them and that it must be prevented.

(…)According to the World Bank report, in 1988 alone, 330 million urban dwellers in developing countries were said to be poor, a situation that was not expected to change much in the following years. When people are too poor to afford basic necessities such as food and clothing, how can they afford to rent or build a decent house?

High interest rates and inflation push bank loan payments far out of reach of many families, and soaring utility costs make it difficult for people to get ahead. Unemployment rates as high as 20% in some countries make it impossible to make ends meet.

These factors have forced hundreds of million people in every corner of the earth to live in substandard housing. They live in old buses, shipping containers and cardboard boxes, under staircases, plastic sheetings and scarps of used lumber. Even abandoned industrial sites have become shelters for them.

To address this housing crisis, substantial efforts are being made by organizations and governments. In Japan, for example, several agencies have been set up to construct affordable housing. Other countries, such as Madagascar, have directed their efforts toward identifying construction methods that will result in inexpensive housing.(…)

Text : Let's teach the young to excel.

Some London schools devise elaborate rules to ensure strict equality in treatment (...). For the best part of the decade, they have been encouraged to play down the element of competition (...).

The same educational policy excludes from a school's timetable any subjects that could be appreciated by only the brightest pupils, which explains the decline of Latin and Greek and the creation of « soft » subjects like sociology.

It is the school's responsibility to encourage and cultivate every child's talents to the full. When accustomed to compete with each other in games, youngsters learn to cope with losing as well as winning, and find it easier to accept that they are not always to equal their most able classmates in academic studies. And in some cases, their competitive success in sports compensates for a relative lack of ability at school.

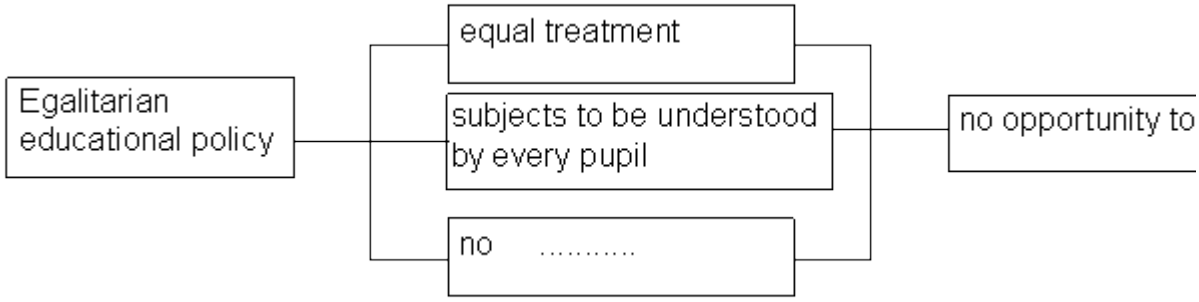

In attempting to eradicate inequalities of human nature, schools succeed only in denying to many children the opportunity to excel.

Humid forests

Humid forests are often called rainforests because they receive a lot of rain during the whole year. In Madagascar they are found in the eastern part of the island, from Fort-Dauphin to the Vohémar area.

Rainforests are among the most complicated ecosystem on earth, in other words they contain many different kinds of plants and animals which interact.

Most of the plants and animals met in Madagascar exist nowhere else on earth. This means that Madagascar is important to people all over the world: many plants in Malagasy rainforests may contain substances that can be used to fight a disease. If the rainforests disappear or are cleared, these plants together with their precious substances will be lost for ever.

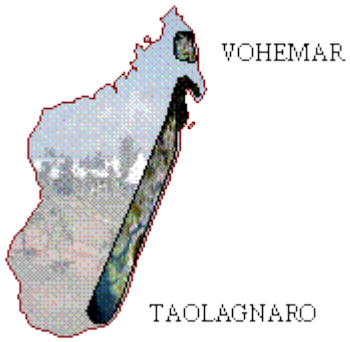

In Madagascar, a lot of people practise "tavy". It is difficult to solve this problem because people burn or cut down trees for subsistence agriculture.

THE FAMADIHANA

Winter is back… But the entire village feels warm today. The family – in its widest sense – is gathered. This is an opportunity which should not be missed since it will only happen every seven years. It is winter and time for the exhumation or « famadihana » (turning of the bones). It is also called « bemenaka », literally « with a lot of oil », as a reference to the very greasy food offered to the guests.

According to our beliefs, a Malagasy person never dies, but just becomes a « razana » (ancestor) who can see, hear and listen to us. And, why not protect and bless us. Omnipresent, he is next to us every day. Sometimes through dreams. And the « bemenaka » is only one facet of these Malagasy habits, customs and beliefs which remain incomprehensible to foreigners when they see such joy a few metres from the family vault…

TEXT : PARENTS AND CHILDREN

Raising children is among modern parents' complaints nowadays. On one hand, children dare say that they are the victims of cruel education ; on the other hand, parents believe that they raise their children willingly and heartily. So, it is very difficult for children and youths to get on well with their parents. What should be done ?

If children rearing practices are not ideal, children will turn out badly. Some youngsters caught in an overly protective controlled family may rebel against their confinement in antisocial ways. Often, their acts are misguided ways of seeking independence or there may be manifestations of anger at parents.

It has also been said that it is bad for children to have a mother who is employed or to grow up in a single parent family. They will suffer from lack of affection. Some students also suggest that children treated violently grow up to be violent adults. Some children will survive under the harshest circumstances but parents should recognize that children are not slaves and their rights must be protected. We are far removed from the old days when a father had the right to put his child to death . . .

TEXT : Is it so bad to have a fever ?

Can a fever be good for you ? Research suggests that infants who experience fever before their first birthday are less likely to suffer from allergies later in life.

Early infections protect against later allergies by boosting the immune system. The thinking is that because modern cleanliness has deprived children of exposure to germs, it has made them more prone to allergies and asthma….

" But this should not stop parents from taking care of their children when they are ill," adds Dr Keiko Williams, the study's lead researcher. " Fever can be dangerous, and we encourage parents to give their child medication if he or she has a rectal temperature of 38.3C or greater."…….

Raising the body temperature helps to kill the invading virus or bacteria as well as increasing the metabolic activity of the white blood cells that fight infections. -…….-

Many adults tend to reach for medication as soon as temperature rises above 37C. However, that may not always be the best reaction. A small increase should not be of concern because temperatures can be affected by stress, room temperature and exertion, and also fluctuate throughout the day (they are usually highest at night). Temperatures differ depending on the way they are measured (via the mouth, ear, rectum or under arms), while children's temperature rises and falls more quickly than adults', perhaps because their immune systems are not yet properly developed.

Does sport bring the nations together?

Sir, the idea that international sport creates "goodwill" between nations is a very false one in my opinion. Nearly all modern sport is fiercely competitive. You play to win, not for fun and exercise. Although it is absurd to think that kicking, hitting or throwing a ball is a test of national virtue, spectators at great international matches often behave like hooligans in support of their own teams, the rules of the games and fair play are forgotten as strong feelings of national pride are aroused. Sometimes the police have to intervene in order to prevent the crowd from invading the field and causing great damage. There have been actual riots at some matches. If this is what "goodwill" between the nations means, I'll have none of it.

People would do better use up their surplus energy for long walks, swimming, riding horses, even climbing trees. Life is competitive enough without adding sport to it.

Yours faithfully,

J. Mailer

TEXT

One of the reasons why so many children start smoking is that they see adults smoking : they think that it's a « grown-up » thing to do. They smoke in order to impress their friends and also because they don't really believe that cigarette will do them any harm. Quite reasonably, they are not impressed when adults warn them about the dangers of smoking : if smoking is so dangerous, why do so many adults do it ?

Smoking can cause cancer, bronchitis and heart disease. The nicotine inhaled from cigarettes makes the heart beat faster, and makes the arteries contract : this can lead the blockages in the arteries, particularly in the legs. Cancer and bronchitis are caused by the tar and carbon monoxide taken into the lungs. Although these harmful effects are well known, people continue to smoke. Some people carry on even after having a heart attack or a leg amputated.

Action on Smoking and Health (ASH) exists in order to make the public aware of the dangers on smoking. So far, it has succeeded in persuading the government to ban cigarette advertising on television.

Environment conservation

1970 was world conservation year. The United Nations wanted everyone to know that the world was in danger. They hoped that governments would act quickly in order to "conserve" nature. Here is one example of the problem. At one time, there were 1300 different plants, trees and flowers in Holland, but now only 866 remain. The others have been destroyed by man and his technology. We are changing the earth, the air and water and everything that grows and lives. We can't live without them.

What will happen in the future? Perhaps it is more important to ask: "What must we do now?". The people who will be living in the world of tomorrow are the young of today. A lot of them know that conservation is necessary. Many are helping to save our world. There are 15 million boy scouts in many countries who study man and the country around him. In some countries, young people spend their spare time as "conservation volunteers". They plant trees, build bridges across rivers in forests and so on. In a small town in the United States, a large group of girls clean the banks of all kilometers of their river.

Traditionally daily household chores are divided according to gender roles. Women take care of the indoor activities and men the outdoor ones. For example, women do the washing, ironing of the clothes, cooking, tidying the house and keep the house clean. Men, however, look after the livestock, chop firewood, pound rice and corn and maintaining the house's construction and fix things that are broken.

Fighting a very clever malaria mosquito.

Donald Dickerson , PMI advisor of the USAID Mission in Madagascar, knows what kind of illness he' s trying to control.

"I was first diagnosed with malaria when I was working in Ghana. You get chills, your temperature goes up and down, and everything aches." In Madagascar, he's been combating the disease for almost three years now as he manages the Presidential Malaria Initiative (PMI).

The PMI program is an initiative of the American government which spreads over 17 countries in Africa. Madagascar was part of the third wave of countries and malaria program activities started here in 2007. (…)

Dickerson says that "we have four ways to fight Malaria: we use bed nets, indoor spraying, preventive treatment for pregnant women and prompt treatment of malaria cases. (…) But, there is a discussion among international health workers about our goals. Can we really eliminate malaria or should we just try to get it to the levels of a minor public health nuisance? I think if we can get the levels down, we can reduce the burden significantly."

TEXT: Help your doctor to help you.

The twelve leading causes of death in advanced countries are now heart disease, cancer, stroke, accidents, flu, pneumonia and bronchitis, diabetes, birth injuries, cirrhosis of the liver, congenital malformation and suicide.
Our vices catch up with us: cigarettes, alcohol, physical inactivity and overeating are the major contributors to the causes of these killing diseases.Medecine has little help to offer for those self-induced conditions of ill health. Surgery is the only treatment which offers a chance of long time survival for people with lung cancer.
Psychiatrists are also singularly unsuccessful at stopping people drinking. Neither do doctors have much success with the obese.
How can our health be improved? The answer is simple, though perhaps discomforting. We can do it ourselves.Ordinary citizens are now in the best position to make effective advances in the prevention of diseases.
Then, we would live longer and eradicate more diseases than could possibly be achieved by even the most expensive modern treatments.
